Defendants.)

This matter is before the Court on Mr. Perkins' Motion for Relief Under 28 U.S.C. § 2255.

Mr. Perkins has argued that he is entitled to re-sentencing because his conviction under 18 U.S.C. § 924(c)(a)(A) for Using a Firearm During a Crime of Violence (Count Two) was rendered unconstitutional by the decision in Johnson v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2552 (2015). On June 26, 2015, the United States Supreme Court decided Johnson v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2551, 1192 L. Ed. 2d 569 (2015), which found that the residual clause, assessing a penalty for “conduct that presents a serious potential risk of physical injury to another” in the Armed Career Criminal Act of 1984 (“ACCA”), 18 U.S.C. §924(e)(2)(B) was unconstitutionally vague. In a follow-up case, Welch v. United States, 136 S. Ct. 1257, 1268, 194 L. Ed.2d 387 (2016), the Supreme Court determined that the rule announced in Johnson was substantive and should be applied retroactively. Johnson did not invalidate any other portion of the definition of a “crime of violence.” Mr. Perkins was not sentenced under the ACAA. Nonetheless, he argues that the residual language in 18 U.S.C. § 924(c) is substantially similar to the invalidated residual clause language in the ACAA.

A crime of violence under 18 U.S.C. § 924(c) means any offense that is a felony and – (A) has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person or property of another, or (B) that by its nature, involves a substantial risk that physical force against the person or property of another may be used in the course of committing the offense. 18 U.S.C. § 924(c)(3)(A),(B). The underlying “crime of violence” referred to in Mr. Perkins’ second count is his conviction for Armed Bank Robbery under 18 U.S.C. § 2113 (a) & (d), (Count One). His conviction for Armed Robbery required a finding that he unlawfully took or attempted to take property belonging to, or in the care, custody, control , management, or possession of any bank, through force, violence or intimidation, and in doing so, assaulted or put someone’s life in jeopardy by the use of a dangerous weapon or device.

Under the modified categorical approach outlined in United States v. McBride, 2016 WL 3209496 (6th Cir., June 10, 2016), Mr. Perkins’ conviction meets the definition of a crime of violence under subsection (A), and the residual clause of subsection (B) need not be applied. Committing a bank robbery by force, violence, and intimidation meets the requirement that there be an element of “use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force. Because Mr. Perkins’ conduct constitutes a “crime of violence” without having to rely on the equivalent of the residual clause for 18 U.S.C. § 924(c)(3)(B), and because Johnson affected only the application of the residual clause language in the ACAA, Johnson has no arguable effect on the validity of Mr. Perkins’ conviction.

Further, the Sixth Circuit has held that Johnson does not invalidate the residual clause of 18 U.S.C. § 924(c)(3). United States v. Taylor, 814 F.3d 340 (6th Cir. 2016). Therefore, even if Armed Bank Robbery did not constitute crimes of violence under Section 924(c)(3)(A), it would qualify under the residual clause of Section 924(c)(3)(B), and Johnson has not be held to have any effect on the validity of that section. Johnson does not apply to Mr. Perkins' case, and any other potential claims are time-barred. 28 U.S.C. §2255(f); Sanchez-Castellano v. United States, 358 F.3d 424, 426 (6th Cir. 2004)(generally there is a one year statute of limitations on post-conviction claims).

The Motion to Vacate (ECF #37), is DENIED. Mr. Perkins' Motion for stay and to supplement 2255 at a later date is also DENIED. (ECF #39). This case is terminated. IT IS SO ORDERED.
